These photos of buried driftwood and slack water deposits were taken in 2010 on the right side of the river at Tilted Park in Cataract Canyon. The camping area is known as Upper Cross & Y Canyon West (Rapid #9).
